Typology of business models in the mobile communications industry

MNO

Mobile network operators (MNOs) are companies that generally own and/or control all the characteristics of a telecom value chain in order to provide services to customers.

The specific assets of MNOs are the broadcasting license and the network infrastructure on which the license is used.

MVNO

In comparison to the MNO, virtual network operators (MVNOs) do not have their own wireless network or broadcasting license.

MVNOs generally purchase network capacity from one (or more) MNOs at a wholesale price and offer their own mobile services under the cooperation agreement.

SERVICE-PROVIDER

Service providers usually enter into a wholesale contract with one (or more) MNOs from whom tariffs are purchased in bulk (retail-minus). Service providers sell both MNO tariffs and their own tariffs. The customer relationship remains with the service provider, who takes over all services (customer management, billing, marketing, etc.).

RESELLER

Resellers usually have a cooperation agreement with one (or more) MNOs for the distribution of mobile phone tariffs. The tariffs are resold to end customers with or without hardware components and devices.

Resellers receive a commission payment for their sales performance.

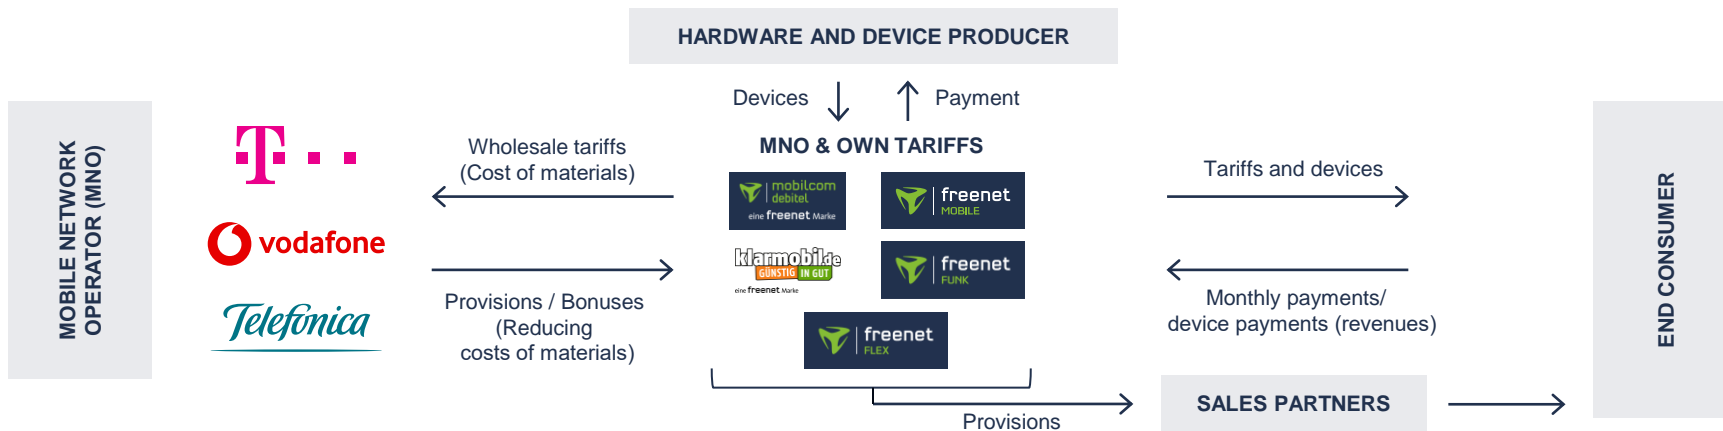

Unique business model with high barriers to entry freenet is a ...

MNO?	→	NO	→	Doesn't own the infrastructure, complete MNO tariff portfolio available
MVNO?	→	NO	→	No obligation to pay for reserved network capacities
RESELLER?	→	NO	→	Customer relationship remains with freenet/revenues do not only consist of provisions
SERVICE PROVIDER?	→	YES	→	High flexibility in the sale of MNO tariffs and the composition of its own tariffs on all MNO networks; direct customer relationship

FREENET HAS A UNIQUE AND SUSTAINABLE BUSINESS MODEL IN MOBILE PHONE INDUSTRIES

Mobile communications in the service provider model

- freenet is the only mobile service provider to offer tariffs (data and voice) from all three German mobile network operators
- Tariff portfolio includes both original tariffs of the network operators as well as its own tariffs
- Customer relationship (contract, billing, service) takes place in its own name and for its own accounts, opportunity for customer development

- freenet sells Postpaid-, Prepaid- and No-Frills tariffs with hardware or SIM-only under premium and discount brands
- Indirect contribution to the expansion of network infrastructure in Germany via usage charges to MNOs
- Strategic focus: Obtaining long-term and valuable postpaid customers (24-month contracts)

Focusing on long-term customer relationships
